Hint

We typically think of volume as "filling up" the inside of the prism. This means that we have to consider the length, width, and height of the prism. When comparing a rectangular prism and a cube, how are the shapes and formulas the same? How are they different?